DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Quarters J is a two-and-one-half-story frame house in the Colonial Revival style located at the end of a short driveway leading to Mull Circle immediately northwest of the main entrance to the Bainbridge Naval Training Center, near Port Deposit, Maryland.

The house has three irregular bays on its main or southeast facade with a central "frontispiece" entrance ornamented with pilasters and a semi-circular arch. The windows are eight over eight sliding sash and louvered shutters flank the second floor windows. On the south elevation a two-story sun porch projects from the main section. The second floor level is enclosed and the lower floor is screened.

The foundation is stone and the exterior covering is white painted clapboard. The slate gable roof is broken by three dormers on the main elevation.

The most important feature of the interior is the fireplace wall in the first floor living room. The Georgian style mantel has a panelled overmantel with crossettes formed by molding strips. Flanking the fireplace are open recessed cupboards with shell ornamentation.
